'Perverts' are jailed over school scandal

The owner of a boys' boarding school and one of his teachers were jailed for 10 years for molesting pupils after a judge labelled them sexual perverts.

The two men, arrested last summer following allegations by pupils on the BBC-TV programme That's Life, had shown no remorse, said Mr Justice Drake yesterday.

"The two of you are sexual perverts. I don't condemn you for being homosexuals, but you satisfy your sexual desires by corrupting young boys," he said at the end of an 18-day trial at Reading Crown Court yesterday.

Philip Cadman, the 74-year-old owner of Crookham Court School, near Newbury, Berks, was found guilty of indecent assault and committing an indecent act with a boy.

He was cleared of another charge of an indecent act and also found innocent with co-defendant William Printer, 35, of joint charges of indecent assault and attempted indecent act.

Printer, a French teacher, was convicted of other charges of indecent assault and an attempted serious sexual offence but cleared of another indecent act.

Deadlock

The jury was deadlocked on four remaining charges of indecent assault — two against each man — and the judge ordered them to remain on the file.

A third defendant, Anthony Edmonds, aged 39, former head of English at the school, admitted 11 offences — four of indecent acts and seven of indecent assault — and was jailed for six years.

Cadman, of South Kensington, west London, bought the school in 1977 for £120,000 "possibly so that he could be introduced to young boys and abuse them", said Mr Anthony King, prosecuting.

Cadman and Printer, of Greenislands, Co Antrim, came under suspicion after a former pupil made the accusations. Cadman was arrested in January last year but released through lack of evidence.

The pupil wrote to That's Life, prompting other pupils to speak out on two programmes in June and July. Police launched a new inquiry and the three were arrested.

The court heard that Edmonds, of Horndean, near Portsmouth, Hants, committed most of his offences against two boys at Trent College in Nottingham and moved to Crookham Court in 1985 after he was sacked for making a proposition to another pupil.

Ransom claim rejected — on violin

French musician Pierre Amoyal is refusing to pay a ransom demand — on his violin.

His Stradivarius violin — valued at 1.5 million dollars — was stolen two years ago near Turin.

It was in his Porsche car, which a thief drove away when Mr Amoyal stopped to buy tobacco. The thief was identified but later found killed.

Police say the violin, which was made in 1717 and once belonged to Czar Nicholas II, is in the hands of the Calabrian Ndrangheta — a version of the Mafia.

Mr Amoyal said in France: "I received 15 days ago a new photograph proving that my violin was not destroyed.

"It is an immense joy to receive news of this violin, which is a veritable friend.

"But my paying any ransom whatsoever is out of the question."

However, he is "ready to participate in an eventual reward", he added.

Mr Amoyal did not say how much the thieves had demanded for the violin's return.

One of the world's leading violinists, he was deeply upset by the theft and cancelled a series of concerts immediately afterwards.

Actress died in surgery

Actress Lian Dellacassa died in a doctor's surgery while waiting to be treated for the slimmers' disease anorexia nervosa, a Bristol inquest heard.

The former TV child star suffered a heart attack after downing a lethal cocktail of laxatives and alcohol-dependency tablets.

Lian, aged 25, was a favourite with millions of young TV viewers when she co-presented the school holiday show 'Why Don't You?' in the late 70s.

Coroner Donald Hawkins returned a verdict that Lian, of Portishead, Bristol, died from non-dependent abuse of drugs.

Family fight verdict on cell-death man

The family of a man who died after allegedly lying seriously ill in a police cell asked the High Court to quash an inquest verdict of "death by natural causes".

Anthony Linnane died in October 1988 after falling ill in the cells at Albany Street police station in north west London.

He was allegedly left for hours lying naked, covered in his own excrement and covered only in a sodden paper towel before being taken into intensive care at University College Hospital.

He died next day from acute myocarditis, inflamation of the heart. An inquest jury last year decided that he had died of natural causes.

But yesterday Mr Alun Jones QC, for Mr Linnane's family, urged the court to quash the original verdict and order a fresh inquest.

Mr Jones said the coroner was wrong to prevent an expert witness giving evidence which would have suggested that 41-year-old Mr Linnane's death was due to lack of care.

The judges reserved judgment. They gave no indication when they would give their decision.

Soap star sobs at second funeral

EastEnders star Mike Reid sobbed uncontrollably as he buried his baby granddaughter — only three months after burying his son.

The Cockney comic carried tiny Kirsty's white coffin into the church at Little Easton, Essex, yesterday.

The devastated Reid family gathered to say goodbye to six-month-old Kirsty, the daughter of Mike's son Mark, who committed suicide.

Farewell

Kirsty's mother Annette Thorne placed a single pink rose on the coffin as Kirsty was buried next to her father after a private service.

In a touching farewell note, Mike wrote: "Kirsty rest peacefully with your daddy, all our love always, Nana and Grandad."

Annette, aged 27, found Kirsty dead last week in bed at their home in Colchester, Essex.

Mark, aged 25, killed himself following a row with girlfriend Annette.

He set himself alight in front of her and died from his burns.

Insecure load firm fined £250

Carpvale Limited, of Gravel Hill, Wombourne, was fined £250 by Wolverhampton magistrates after it admitted using a motor vehicle with an insecure load.

Driver, Stephen Morgan, aged 27, of Pool Hall Crescent, Castlecroft, Wolverhampton, admitted a similar charge and was fined £150 yesterday.
